

DNA encoding phage abortive infection mechanism from lactococcus lactis

The present invention relates to a 2227-bp DNA fragment that confers antiphage activity. Two proteins encoded by this DNA sequence are responsible for the phage resistance phenotype. When introduced in Lactococcus lactis phagesensitive strain, this DNA fragment aborts infection of phages of the 936 and P335 species.
